“Happy New Year 2026”

Why is New Year's on January 1?

Is New Year's celebrated on the same day everywhere in the world? Before you say yes remember Chinese New Year, which comes a few weeks later. We celebrate it every year without thinking twice, but why is that the chosen day and month and not, say, sometime in July? In the U.S., we follow the solar-based Gregorian calendar, so New Year's Day always lands on January 1. In 2026, that's a Thursday. And fun fact: The first place to welcome the new year is usually Kiribati, way out in the Pacific, thanks to its early time zone. Lunar calendars work differently. A lunar year is about 354 days, so the dates shift. The best-known example? Chinese New Year, or Lunar New Year, which starts on the second new moon after the winter solstice. That celebration will start on Feb. 17, 2026. It's all thanks to the Romans. Emperor Julius Caesar decided to end confusion about the calendar (more on that below) by creating a standardized version that followed the solar year. After consulting with scientific experts, in 46 B.C., he introduced the Julian calendar. In this calendar, January 1 was established as the official first day of the new year. This coincides with the time of year that Earth is closest to the sun. It's also in honor of Janus, the namesake god of January, known for having two faces—one looking forward to the future and one looking backward to the past. That wasn't quite the end, though. In 1582, Pope Gregory XIII tweaked the Julian calendar, creating the Gregorian calendar, which is the standard most of the world uses today. He reestablished January 1 as New Year's Day.
